Weekly Market Update

Market Data as of Week Ending: 11/13/2026 unless noted otherwise

Stocks rebounded from the prior week's selloff, though hot inflation data and rising yields trimmed the gains. Monday did most of the work. All 11 S&P 500 sectors rose, oil fell on hopes for progress with Iran, and the semiconductor index bounced nearly 7%. AI stocks got another lift Wednesday when CoreWeave beat estimates, raised its 2026 outlook, doubled its operating margin to 10%, and reported a $132.5 billion backlog, easing worries about how AI build-outs will be financed. NVIDIA moved the other way. Reports about CEO Jensen Huang's personal conduct led to his resignation on Thursday, and the stock fell roughly 14% for the week. The S&P 500 gained 2.5%, the Nasdaq 2.3%, and the Dow 2.1% on the week as growth companies largely outpaced their value counterparts. Third-quarter earnings remain a key support: with about 80% of S&P 500 companies reported, earnings are tracking about 35% higher than a year ago. Oil eased, with WTI ending near $89, though it rebounded Thursday after President Trump said the U.S. no longer needs a deal with Iran.

Treasuries sold off sharply as hotter-than-expected inflation data and hawkish Fed comments pushed rate-hike expectations higher. Fed Governor Christopher Waller said a half-point hike could be appropriate, and other officials stressed that more work is needed to bring inflation back to 2%. A December hike is now fully priced in, and markets see meaningful odds of another increase in January. Weak demand at the 3-year and 10-year note auctions added to the pressure. The 2-yr yield jumped about 33 basis points to 4.88% and the 10-yr rose about 28 basis points to 5.15%, leaving the 10-yr just 27 basis points above the 2-yr. Credit held up better than Treasuries: investment-grade spreads tightened to 86 basis points and high-yield spreads to 316, and high yield lost only 0.3%.

Inflation is proving stickier than hoped. Consumer prices rose 0.4% in October, slower than September's 0.6% but above the 0.3% forecast. Core CPI increased 0.3%, also beating expectations. No year-over-year figures were published because last year's government shutdown interrupted data collection. Core CPI has now posted three firm readings in a row, running at about a 3.6% annualized pace, with strength across services, housing, and goods. Producer prices rose 0.3% for the month, slightly below forecasts. However, September was revised up to 1.4%, and the annual rate climbed to 6.5%, the fastest since November 2022, with core producer prices up 5.0% from a year ago. The labor market stayed tight: initial jobless claims rose to 200,000 but have held at or below that level since early September. Housing remains the weak spot. Existing home sales fell 5.5% to a 3.75 million annual rate, the slowest pace in more than 16 years.
